- Can I inspire members of my organisation with a deeper sense of meaning and purpose?
- Do I understand other people's perspectives?
- Can I work with a diversity of worldviews?
- Can I access, even under stress, my creativity, intuition, purpose, fulfilment and empathy?

The professional benefits of IQ and, more recently, Emotional Intelligence (EQ) have been recognised and incorporated into workplace cultures. By themselves, however, they do not provide tools to answer the fundamental questions that our times' rapidly changing circumstances are asking us all.

Research from Harvard Business School is showing the emergence of a higher form of leadership in the organisations that are managing to adapt to the current challenges in our world, showing skills of wisdom, compassion, humility and courage. In this week, we will look at examples of this emerging edge and how it works in organisations, using the Deep Change model of Spiritual Intelligence.

Working on the principle that "who you are is how you lead", the model uses an assessment tool, the SQ21™. Using a framework of 21 skills, each with five levels of development, it helps you map your strengths and identify areas that are ripe for development. An SQ21 assessment is included in the course fee and delivers a 20-page report with pointers for further advancement.

Combining the Spiritual Intelligence Model with the inspiring transformational atmosphere at Findhorn, we will create a fun and enjoyable week. Return to your workplace with a feeling of being connected to something greater than yourself, with a new network of like-minded people, ready to create a positive, sustainable future for you and your organisation.
